Dear Professor Fitzgerald,

I am very much indebted to you for your trouble in looking over my paper on absolute temperatures. I made a mistake in the theory, as you pointed out. I have taken that into account & rewritten the whole of the theory, & I hope have not made any fresh mistakes; your other criticisms were useful too, but I think you will find that despite the quantity of figures contained in the paper, I do not claim any accuracy

That is not justified by the data. I have, in accordance with your suggestion tried to indicate just what is needed in the way of future experiments.

You see I want to trespass further on your kindness; would you mind looking through the revised version to see if you think it is worth publishing?

You may think I have been a long time about it, but by the time I received your letter, I was immersed in a piece of experimental work at the Davy-Faraday, and it is only

20/23

Since the reaction that I have been able to track this paper again.

Yours sincerely

Robert A. Schryver
